A bathroom should be the best room in your home

It is the first room you walk into in the morning and the last one you visit before bed. When it is done well, it changes the temperature of how your day starts and ends.

The morning slows down.

The light lands where it should.

The room rewards you for spending a few minutes in it rather than rushing out.

When it is done badly, you live with it for ten or fifteen years and wish you had waited for someone better. Elite Touch builds the first kind.

Three recent Sydney bathrooms we built

The shortest way to understand how we work is to look at projects we have built. Each case study documents the design decisions, the trades, the standards, and what we would watch out for if you are considering something similar.

The Rocks heritage bathroom

A full renovation built around an original timber-framed window in a 19th-century terrace — modern bathroom performance with no damage to heritage fabric. link: read The Rocks case study.

Hunters Hill marble bathroom

Full-height natural marble, a custom double vanity, and a freestanding bath under plantation shutters. A hotel-grade family bathroom designed to feel current in fifteen years. [\[link: read the Hunters Hill case study\]](#).

Artarmon bathroom and ensuite

Two wet areas delivered in a single four-week program — large-format porcelain, custom vanities, LED backlit mirrors, and a consistent design language across both rooms. [\[link: read the Artarmon case study\]](#).

Which renovation are you planning?

We approach each room type a little differently — what works for a guest powder room is not what works for a master ensuite. Pick the closest match for a deeper look:

- [\[link: Ensuite renovations\]](#) — small-footprint, master-suite work with proper ventilation and acoustic detailing
- [\[: link: Bathroom and laundry renovations\]](#) — two wet areas in a single program
- [\[: link: Powder room renovations\]](#) — the smallest room, designed to make the biggest impression

Built to standards, delivered by people you can name

Bathroom work is regulated work. The four Dawoods running Elite Touch — and the licensed plumbers, electricians and waterproofers on every job — work to the current Australian Standards, with certificates issued at handover.

What this page deliberately does not do

- It does not re-tell the family story that is on About
- It does not list scope of works, timeline bands or budget ranges they are on service pages
- It does not document individual projects in detail they are on case studies

- It does not re-list Australian Standards in detail that info is on service / case studies but it does have (AS 3740) once in context.

What actually stops people from renovating

It is rarely the design. It is almost everything around the design as the quote that drifts, the trades who do not show up, the budget that grows mid-build, the disruption nobody warned you about. Before we talk about what we do well, here is how we handle the things most homeowners are right to worry about.

"I keep getting quotes that are not really quotes"

Every Elite Touch project starts with a free on-site measure and a written, fixed-scope quote. Inclusions, exclusions, and the allowances for tiles, taps and joinery are spelled out in plain language. The quote is the contract — not a starting figure that grows the closer we get to your bathroom.

"I am worried about what they will find behind the wall"

Older Sydney homes hide rot, non-compliant plumbing, and sometimes asbestos. We allow a sensible contingency in every quote, inspect substrates as soon as the room is open, and tell you what we find before any extra work begins. If something needs to change, you get a written variation. There is no "while we were in there" invoice at the end.

"I do not trust 'family business' claims"

Fair enough. Elite Touch is run by members of the Dawood family — Omar, Farah and Mo. You will meet at least one of us at the on-site measure, and the same project manager will be your point of contact from quote to handover. The fuller story is on our [\[link: About page\]](#).

"I will be a small job to someone who would rather do extensions"

Bathrooms are not a sideline for us. They are the only work we do — [\[: link: full bathroom renovations\]](#), [\[: link: ensuite renovations\]](#), [\[: link: powder room renovations\]](#), and [\[: link: combined bathroom-and-laundry renovations\]](#).

That focus is why the standard of finish stays consistent across every project.

"The waterproofing terrifies me"

It should. A failed waterproofing membrane is the single most expensive thing that can go wrong in a bathroom — mould inside cavities, rotted framing, damaged ceilings on the floor below. Every Elite Touch bathroom is waterproofed to AS 3740-2021 by a certified applicator, with a Certificate of Compliance issued on completion. The plumbing is certified separately; the electrical is certified separately. You get all three at handover.

"We have nowhere else to wash if it runs long"

We tell you up front which week is the most disruptive — usually the strip-out and waterproofing week — and we plan around it with you, not in spite of you. Households with a single bathroom can plan for a temporary arrangement during that specific window rather than the whole build.

"I have seen too many renovations that look like the brochure but feel wrong to live in"

Our designer, Farah Dawood, leads the design conversation with the question that matters most: how is the room actually going to be used? Storage that fits your routine, lighting that flatters in the morning, finishes that handle real life. The look comes after the brief is right. link: [Hunters Hill case study] is a good example.
